

Remsfield Papillon

Junior Web Developer

Hi! My name is Remsfield Papillon. I am 21 years old and I currently attend Fairfield University pursuing a Bachelor's Degree in Computer Science. Computer Science is a strong passion of mine, in which I've grown comfortable with web development and technologies fueling it.

While I currently attend Fairfield University studying Computer Science, my experience with programming languages began in middle school, where I took up learning languages like C++ and Javascript on my own with the goal of reverse engineering a game I used to play. My goals have changed since then, but my passion stuck. As I grew older, I found myself adding more skills to the table, learning the basics of HTML and CSS towards the end of High School, as well as Python and Java as my college career began.

My relationship with web development began towards the middle of my college career, following my service project/design competition with the Fairfield CARES Coalition. During this project, I worked alongside a team of students to produce a website for the Coalition. I fell in love with helping people through code, and this experience further pointed me towards web development as a field worth discovering. My team's design ended up winning the competition, yet I still felt a push to learn technologies like Node.js, React JS, and Next JS to more efficiently develop better websites in the future.

There is always something new to learn, and I look to join an organization that provides ample opportunities to learn and grow as a developer. It's this push to learn and love for service that has come to define me as a budding web developer. I always strive to help and serve others through my craft and I am currently seeking the right workplace to allow me better serve others through code. I want to thank you for taking the time to read this letter and I am looking forward to your response.
